

Dear Game Show Network,

I'm curious to know what the hell you guys are thinking when you make up your schedule. How many sane individual could program 168 hours of game shows a week, and exclude Jeopardy is beyond my comprehension. Do you just put a bunch of monkeys in a room with typewriters until you have a schedule? That must be the demographic you're aiming at, because that's who's watching the mindless, retarded shows you're gracing us with now: monkeys.

When someone hears the phrase "game show", Jeopardy is probably the first show that comes to mind. Yet for some unknown reason, it is noticeably absent from your line-up. And I've got a news flash for all you Einsteins in programming, LOVE CONNECTION IS NOT A GAME SHOW! It's a dating show. Am I to assume that in two or three years Blind Date and Fifth Wheel will be running on your network. Please tell me now, so I can heave my television from a moving truck and then heave myself afterwards. How about exercising a little common sense and possibly, maybe, someone might just learn something from television for a change.

Personally, I have no morals whatsoever, and am never offended by anything, ever. But you managed to pluck a string that's never been plucked before, with shows like "The Newlywed Game". Seriously, who gives a shit if Jim-Bob and Lurleen both remember the time they humped at the drive-in in July of 1973?? By now, all those inbred trailer-dwellers are most likely divorced. At least change the show titles on the old episodes to, "The People Who Were Once Married, Decided To Go On A Stupid Game Show, Humiliate Themselves, And Regret It For The Rest Of Their Lives, Until Their Ultimate Demise In A Hunting Accident Show" Sure, it'll take up alot of space in the T.V. Guide, but just think of all the happy little mongoloid children you'll be pleasing.

Get it together over there ladies. Jeopardy is the ONLY game show to people who use utensils when they eat. Feel free to join the rest of us in Smart People Land anytime.

*Love,
Bill Scott*
